1. On the afternoon of 10 January Radescu held a meeting with representatives of the various political groups in the government to discuss the Russian order to deport to Russia Saxons and Swabians from Rumania. Representatives of the National Democratic Front, the National Liberals, and the National Peasants were present at the meeting. They unanimously decided to: (A) Protest formally against this arbitrary measure, which is not within the terms of the armistice; (B) Propose that the Russians exempt mothers with children under 4 years, workers essential to the combined war effort of the USSR and Rumania, and persons not belonging to German ethnic groups; (C) If exemptions are not granted, to comply with the original order, pointing out that Rumania is a small country and is incapable of opposing the order; (D) Present a formal memorandum to the Russians stating these points.

2. After the meeting Radescu informed Vinogradov that the memorandum would be presented the next day. It was still being re-drafted at noon, 12 January, however. . . . . .
